In 1658 Pope Alexander VII commissioned the architect Carlo Rainaldi to build two churches in the Piazza del Popolo, both dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and foundation stones were laid in 1661 and 1662 respectively.

The reverse of our medal records Rainaldi's design at the time of laying the cornerstone of Santa Maria di Montesanto, on 15 July 1662, after Rainaldi had modified his original design by adding free-standing porticos, but before changes instituted by his collaborator, Carlo Fontana, in 1664, and by Rainaldi himself in 1665.¹ The piazza was given its present form between 1816 and 1820 by Giuseppe Valadier, who added the two curved bays at the sides and the terraces leading up to the Pincio.

¹ Giovanni Incisa della Rocchetta, in 'La medaglia di Alessandro VII per S. Maria di Montesanto e S. Maria dei Miracoli', in Messagero, 6 April 1926, published a letter from Rainaldi to Mons. Gastaldi (undated) regarding the completion of this medal. On the evidential value of the medal for Rainaldi's design, see Hellmut Hager, 'Zur Planungs- und Baugeschichte der Zwillingskirchen auf der Piazza del Popolo' in Römisches Jahrbuch für Kunstgeschichte 11 (1967–1968), pp.191–307, especially p.212 (medal reproduced as fig. 144).

This is one of the most picturesque of all papal architectural medals. The piazza is shown busy with pedestrians and carriages, clouds float overhead, and behind the new churches a complete townscape is visible. The high degree of illusionism is typical of the designs furnished by Gian Lorenzo Bernini to the papal medallist Travani, and it is generally assumed that the scene of the piazza depends from a Berninesque model so far undiscovered.

The portrait of Alexander VII on the obverse is the version with the Risen Christ embroidered in the stole. Travani also cast the portrait with embroidery depicting Christ on the way to Calvary, and again with the Annunciation.²
