A RARE SUITE OF ENGRAVINGS of female costume accompanied by blank escutcheons with elaborate crests and mantling, intended for blazoning as coats of arms. The title specifies that it was meant to serve as an 'album amicorum': new acquaintances and friends of the owner were to choose a print, and fill in the template with their coat of arms; sententiae could also be added to the image, as well as a signature and date. Publishers had been producing illustrated books which could be used as 'alba amicorum' since the 1570s. As the form evolved, engravings of emblems, costumes, and scenes of particular towns or provinces were provided, to allow contributors to embellish their entries without going to the expense of commissioning illustrations from professional scriveners. The market for such 'ready-made' alba depended largely on male university students, intent on preserving the memories of persons encountered and places visited during their peregrinatio academico. The vogue for these publications proved short-lived, dying out before the middle of the seventeenth century.¹

Fig. 4. Sus, sus, mon Lut, d'un accord pitoyable (stanzas 1-4), written by Hand B

The engraver of the costumes found inspiration in Jean-Jacques Boissard's costume book of 1581, copying (in reverse) selected figures of women from that compendium of the typical dress of men and women of all ranks of society and of all nations and cities.² The series presents young girls, brides, ladies, and widows in the native dress of Brabant (5), France (3), Lorraine (1), Spain (2), Venice (4), Rome (2), Pisa (1), Bologna (2), Florence (2), Bohemia (2), Swabia (2), Switzerland (1), Greece (4), and England (1). The blank armorial shields mostly depend from woodcuts by Jost Amman published by Sigmund Feyerabend in the 1580s, mediated through engravings by the De Brys, in particular their Emblematum nobilitati et vulgo scitu digna... Stam vnd Wapenbuchlein (1592).³

² Jean Jacques Boissard, Habitus variarum orbis gentium: Habitz de nations estra[n]ges: Trachten mancherley Völcker des Erdskreyss ([Mechlin?]: Caspar Rutz 1581-1588). One of the 61 plates is signed by Julius Goltzius, but the set appears to have been engraved by several hands.

The Album amicorum habitibus mulierum was first published in 1599 and reissued thereafter with the date in the address either corrected in the matrice (1601) or scraped from the paper and corrected by pen (1602, 1605, 1606). The printmaker-publisher Zangrius (de Sanger, de Zangre, Zangre) had commenced his activities in Louvain around 1595; his last dated book appeared there in 1605.⁴

Judging by the handful of surviving copies, most purchasers used the book as an album amicorum (see PROVISIONAL CENSUS). Our copy is atypical in containing none of the autographed pages that make up other alba. It was adapted for a different purpose: the prints were interleaved, and French lyric verse entered instead on the blank pages.

The binding features an emblem of Cupid on both covers, and it seems certain that the copy was a tool of courtship, presented by a lover to his lady. Regrettably, the courting couple have concealed their identities in a monogram and in subscriptions beneath the songs: nothing is known of the book's provenance before its acquisition by the Belgian painter Joseph Paelinck (1781-1839).

CHANSONS

The binder has interleaved the book with ninety-three folios of blank paper. Songs are written on thirty folios (52 pages);⁵ on another five folios is a list of coats of arms borne by the nobility of Brabant;⁶ the rest of the interleaves remain blank. The contributions of two hands can be identified. One wrote in three scripts: an extremely neat non-cursive italic, used for the first five songs, in which the first letter of the first line is reserved for a decorative capital (not inserted), shifting to a cursive, and finally to a rapid italic for the final two pieces (here designated hand A). The other hand also wrote in various scripts: a Gothic-derived secretary, a cursive, and (once) italic (hand B). The principal hand (B) wrote seventeen songs, including the 'Testament d'Amour' (Puis qu'en dueil et tourment) and some songs of bawdy nature; it could be masculine. The other hand (A) wrote twelve songs, predominantly in italic, the script commonly used by women, and indicative of high social status and education. A third hand (C) perhaps entered the last song in the volume, and a fourth listed the coats of arms.

⁶ 'Blasonnement des armes de quelques familles' (ff.34-38 rectos; all versos blank), written by a later owner, citing Joseph van den Leene, Le theatre de la noblesse du Brabant (Liège 1705).

The songs are mostly headed 'Chanson' or 'Chanson Nouvelle', with one designated 'Courante' and another 'La Pauanilla' (Pavane), musical forms associated with dance. The majority are airs de cour. This repertory was then circulating in anthologies of poetry published without music – although intended for singing – and in anthologies of airs intabulated for voice and lute. There are often substantial differences between the lyrics in the album and contemporary printed sources, suggesting that the texts may not have been copied, but entered from memory of orally performed versions. The first piece in the album, Dieu vous garde bergerette, is an example: the text is an early version of the air,⁷ supplemented by an additional (seventh) sextain, for which we find no printed source.⁸ Likewise, the air Si c'est pour mon pucelage | que vous me faites l'amour ('If it is for my virginity that you want to make love', written by hand A) is not the dialogue text set by Jean-Baptiste Besard and Pierre Guédron, but another version, as yet unidentified.⁹

No poets (or composers) are named, although attributions to Charles Tessier, Pierre Cerveau, and Pierre Guédron can be derived from concordant musical sources and collections of poetry. Several songs have to date eluded identification.

Fig. 7. Subscription to Le voicy la nacelle d'Amour, written by Hand A.
 The monogram may combine the initials of her name; the adjacent symbol
 ('s fermé', or fermesse) is a sign for fidelity in love.

⁹ The song is presented as five quatrains of verse of seven syllables, plus a repeated refrain of seven syllables. The other stanzas commence 'Vous avez la Coeur volaige', 'Laissez la tous ses faintises', 'Dessonbs la blanche Jacquette', 'Helas je meurs ma cruelle'; see further, footnote 17.

PROVISIONAL CENSUS OF COPIES

'Only four copies of this exceptional album amicorum' were known in 2001 to the editors of Hollstein, who report that the 'composition of each volume is different' and 'it is likely that clients were free to decide the order or composition of the sets to be bound, as a kind of keepsake'.⁴⁰ Two editions are described in Hollstein, dated 1599 and 1602 respectively, the former from a copy in Brussels composed of sixty-four plates, the latter from a copy in London which contains extraneous portraits.⁴¹ Our edition dated 1601 is not recorded in Hollstein, although a copy has been in Glasgow University Library since 1958 (ex-Stirling Maxwell collection), and others have passed through auction sale rooms.

⁴¹ Albert VII, Archduke of Austria (1559-1621), Governor General of the Hapsburg Netherlands; his wife, Isabella Clara Eugenia (1566-1633); and the Flemish humanist Justus Lipsius (1547-1606). Two plates have publication lines (Io. Baptist Zangrius excud. Louanij; Io. Baptist Zangrius fe.); each is dated 1601.
