BINDING 19th-century half-leather, red marbled sheet edges.

A SUITE of etched designs of escutcheons and cartouches destined for coats of arms, intended to provide sculptors, painters, and engravers, with models and ideas. The designs are characterised as 'esagerazioni stravaganti sulla moda del Bernini', and lately recognised as anticipating certain models of Pietro da Cortona and Francesco Borromini.¹

Cf. Carlo Cresti, L'architettura del Seicento a Firenze (Rome 1990), p.152; Paolo Portoghesi, Roma barocca, second edition (Rome 1973), p.120, on the influence of Radi's models in Florence and Rome.

Apprenticed in Cortona with his father Mariotto Radi (1563–1624), a sculptor and capo mastro, Bernardino travelled to Rome with his elder brother Agostino, and from 1611 was employed by Scipione Borghese carving fountains, portals, and ornaments (opera di scarrello) in the palazzo and gardens on Montecavallo. In 1614, Agostino married Giuditta Bernini, daughter of Pietro and sister of Gian Lorenzo, and afterwards he and Bernardino became ‘collaboratori fissi dei cantieri berniniani’, executing balustrades, fountains, and architectural ornaments in the gardens of the Belvedere, Borgo, Montecavallo, and Villa Pinciana.² In April 1622, the brothers collaborated on the tomb of Paul V in Santa Maria Maggiore; shortly afterward, they parted company: Agostino continued working in Rome as a sculptor, while Bernardino devoted himself more to architectural projects, initially as ‘soprintendente delle fabbriche’ of the port and fortress at Civitavecchia (1624–1626), then in Cortona (1629), and afterwards in Florence.

Bernardino’s activities in Florence include work on the twin fountains in Piazza SS. Annunziata, a project for the façade of the Duomo, an aqueduct to control the Mungone river, the front façade of the Palazzo of the Padri delle Missioni in Piazza Frescobaldi, the cloister of the Canonici Regolari di Sant’Jacopo sopr’Arno, and the church of SS. Cristina e Agostino (completed after his death by Gherardo Silvani).³ In Rome he had expressed his passion for designing decorative architectural ornaments in two collections of prints, designs for funerary monuments and for doorways, both published in 1619, dedicated respectively to his patrons Stefano Pignatelli⁴ and Scipione Borghese.⁵

Presentation copies of these publications were in Carlo Maderno’s private library (Howard Hibbard, Carlo Maderno and Roman architecture, London 1971, pp.98, 103).

In Florence, in 1636, Bernardino published the present collection of etched designs, dedicated to Cardinal Gian Carlo de' Medici, second son of Grand Duke Cosimo II of Tuscany. The plates are models for escutcheons adorning buildings and monuments; many are embellished with ecclesiastical insignia; all are blank, with the exception of the first which displays the Medici coat of arms (sei palle). A selection of the plates was copied by Hierosme (or Jérôme) David (c. 1600–after 1670), and published in Rome by Calisto Ferrante, in 1649.⁶

INSERTED at the end of the volume by a recent owner are two drawings associated with a series of twenty-four etchings of decorative cartouches and ornaments, designed and probably also etched by Agostino Mitelli, and published at Bologna by Agostino Parisini with a dedication to Francesco Maria Zambecari, in 1636.²¹ This was Agostino Mitelli's first series of prints, issued before he left Bologna for Florence, where he was engaged from 1637–1641 in decorating three rooms of the Palazzo Pitti. The sequence of editions suggests strong appetite for Mitelli's designs; their influence still awaits investigation.²²

The original matrices were restruck at Rome by Giovanni Giacomo de Rossi, and his heirs, from about 1648 until after 1735,²³ an edition jointly by De Rossi and Sebastiano Zecchini of Perugia appeared in 1653 as an epithalamium for Anna Colonna, married in Rome on 24 February to Don Paolo Vincenzo Spinola.²⁴ A set of exact copies was made in Paris and distributed there by Claude Roussel, Pierre Mariette, and later Gabriel Huquier.²⁵
