Occasional foxing, particularly to tissue interleaves; otherwise in excellent state of preservation.

BOUNDED uniformly in contemporary russia leather, dyed purple, engraved ticket in upper corner of pastedown Gebunden bei Ph. Selenka in Wiesbaden (volumes I–III).

VERY FINE COPY of a scholarly and thorough archaeological study of Pompeii, intended by its author as the beginning of a series on Paestum, Herculaneum, and Pozzuoli.

After studying for a short time in the studio of the architect Charles Percier, Mazois had travelled to Italy in November 1808 with a fellow-student, Achille Leclère, winner of the 1808 Prix de Rome for architecture. Through the agency of Etienne-Chérubin Leconte (1762–1818), architect to Carolina Murat, Queen of Naples, Mazois was appointed dessinateur de son cabinet, and afterwards gained access to the excavations, still jealously controlled by the Naples Academy. From 1809 to 1811, he resided in the ruins, making hundreds of drawings. At the beginning of 1811, Mazois returned to Rome, where he apparently supervised the engraving of some of his drawings, and proceeded thence to Paris to prepare the text. Owing to political circumstances, Mazois could not return to Naples until 1816, and then his visit was restricted to a month; in 1818 he was able to remain for nearly a year; his final visit, in 1819, was again very brief.

A prospectus inviting subscriptions to the work was published in December 1812,¹ and the first fascicule appeared in January 1813, distributed by the booksellers M. Leclerc, Didot l’ainé, and Normand, on two papers: papier ordinaire and papier fin (i.e. vélin), each livrai- son priced respectively 20 and 30 francs.² Further fascicules, often containing fewer, or more, than the promised six plates, appeared thereafter at irregular intervals. In 1824, they were gathered up, and issued as two volumes.

On New Year's Eve, 1826, Mazois died of apoplexy, having completed just the first three fascicules of the projected third volume. His widow made his drawings available to Franz Christian Gau (1790–1853), and they were integrated into two further volumes. Gau wrote the text for the third volume, published in 1829; and Louis Barré was the principal author of the fourth volume, issued in January 1838.³ The completed work as advertised by Firmin Didot Frères was priced 700 francs (papier vélin 1000 francs).⁴

The illustrations in the first three volumes were mostly drawn by Mazois⁵ and engraved by printmakers working in Italy, including Giovanni Battista Cipriani, Vincenzo Feoli, Carl Ludwig Frommel, Pietro Ruga, and Angelo Testa. The illustrations in the fourth volume were drawn by Gau, and by the Parisian draughtsmen André Giroux, J.N.L. Durand, or Frommel; the printmakers were mainly French, and included Jean Adam, Jean Baptiste Arnout, Louis Pierre Baltard de la Fresque, 'Bigand', 'Bishop', Thomas Boys, Louis Félix Butavand, Alexandre Charles Dormier, 'Duvau', 'Fincke', G. Hamilton, Charles Paul Landon, 'Lemaitre', 'Lesnier', 'Millet', 'Normand', I.ne Nyon, E. Olivier, 'Réville', 'Sellier', and A. Simonet. One of the hand-coloured plates (III, pl. 46) is signed by the miniaturist Ferdinand Groubenthal (1792/1797–c. 1840).⁶ One of the few lithographs in (volume IV, pl. XLII) was printed by Gottfried Engelmann.⁷

This copy contains a leaf of dedication in volume I addressed ‘A sa Majesté La Reine Des Deux-Siciles’. The leaf is present also in the copy in the British Architectural Library, but is lacking in the Royal Academy Library copy: ‘If this was to Napoleon’s sister, Caroline, this dedication page may well have been omitted from sets of plates distributed after 1813, when she was evicted from Naples’ (OPAC of Royal Academy of Arts).

Our copy contains the engraved ticket of the bookbinder Philipp Selenka (1803–1850) of Wiesbaden, brother of Johann Jacob Selenka (1801–1871), Hofbuchbinder in Braunschweig.⁸
