Milan, Stamperia Reale, 1812

OCTAVO (210 × 128 mm), (32)ff. signed 1–4⁸ and paginated 1–63 (1).

PROVENANCE bound for Eugène Rose de Beauharnais, Prince of Venice, Viceroy of Italy (1781–1824) — Count Jean-Louis Temple de Rougemont (1910–1990) and Countess Louise du Temple de Rougemont (née Louise Lejeune, 1913–2002) — sale by Sotheby's, 'Provenances impériales: Bibliothèque du Général et de la Comtesse du Temple de Rougemont', Paris, 6 December 2006, lot 70

In fine state of preservation.

BOUND in contemporary straight-grain, red morocco, arms of the kingdom of Italy as created by Napoleon blocked in gold on both covers within roll-tooled frames of Neoclassical ornament, the flat back decorated by interlinked quatrefoils and lettered Distrib | de | Premj, another roll on turn-ins, the board edges ornamented by a single fillet; by Luigi Lodigiani of Milan, his oval, yellow engraved ticket Lodigiani | Relieur | de S.A.I. | à Milan pasted in upper corner of front free-endpaper.

A FINE BINDING by Luigi Lodigiani of Milan (1777–1843) on a volume issued in 1812 by the Milanese Academy of fine arts, in which the prize-winners in the annual students' competitions (architecture, painting, sculpture, printmaking, drawing) are published, together with a catalogue of the display of the academicians' production, the texts of two discorsi: one delivered by the Secretary of the Academy and Professor of Architecture, Giuseppe Zanoia (1752–1817), the other by Luigi Rossi, 'Ispettore generale della Direzione di pubblica Istruzione' (1776–1824), and a list of the forty-five members of the Academy, headed by the Viceroy of Italy, Eugène de Beauharnais (1781–1824).

As the insignia on the covers incorporates elements of the coat of arms of Napoleon I, including the eagle, the chain of the Légion d'honneur, and imperial mantle, and in addition the Napoleonic star and Napoleonic N, our volume – like other books featuring the same insignia – has been misidentified as a book bound for Napoleon himself.¹ The arms are in fact those of the kingdom of Italy (decreed on 18 February 1806), which Eugène de Beauharnais applied on certain of his books. Curiously, Napoleon never assigned any arms to his adopted son: before his appointment as Viceroy, Eugène employed his father's arms; thereafter, until the end of the kingdom in 1814, he showed his ownership by the present insignia, or by an eagle with the Lombard crown,² or – after his marriage on 1 April 1806, to Augusta-Amalia of Bavaria (1788–1851) – by the monogram EA surmounted by the electoral crown.

After Napoleon's abdication, Eugène de Beauharnais retired to Munich, where he was created Duke of Leuchtenberg and Prince of Eichstätt. He succeeded in taking many of his books with him, and continued to collect avidly.³ His accomplishment as bibliophile however was hidden, until a series of four auction sales of the Leuchtenberg library, conducted 1928–1935,⁴ revealed him as the most important book-lover to have appeared in Italy for over a century.⁵

The discovery of Leuchtenberg library focused attention on the binder Luigi Lodigiani, whose work for the Viceroy's General Secretary, Étienne Méjan (Mejean), Comte d'Empire (1766–1846), had already been noted.⁶ Lodigiani's other notable clients were the Emperor Francis I,⁷ Archduke Rainer of Austria,⁸ and by repute Napoleon (this information may be based on the traditional misreading of the Beauharnais arms as those of Napoleon);⁹ he must, however, have operated a large shop, and catered for numerous clients, as substantial quantities of his bindings are now being identified, not only locally, in the Ambrosiana, Braidense¹⁰ and Trivulziana¹¹ in Milan, the Biblioteca Statale di

¹ See PROVENANCE above (the bindings on lots 33, 49, 70 all are misinterpreted by Sotheby's cataloguers). For correct readings of the insignia, see A.R.A. Abbey* (Oxford 1953), pp.171 note 5, 183 ('Appendix E'); and Martin Breslauer, Inc., 'Catalogue 110: Fine books and manuscripts in fine bindings', New York, circa 1995, item 177. Although not the urtext, the error has been circulated widely by Eugène Olivier, Georges Hermal, and Robert de Roton, Manuel de l'amateur de reliures armoriées françaises (Paris 1924–1935), no. 2675 (the arms block on our volume is reproduced as fer 2).

⁴ The library of Eugène and Augusta-Amalia was dispersed in two sales by Paul Graupe, 'Auktion 81: Die Bibliothek der Herzogin Augusta-Amalia von Leuchtenberg-Beauharnais', Berlin, 22–23 October 1928, 894 lots (cf. lot 310, bound by Lodigiani with same insignia appearing on our binding); and 'Auktion 87: Die Bibliothek des Herzogin Georgij N [ikolaevich, Duke] von Leuchtenberg, und Beiträge aus anderem Besitz', Berlin, 15–16 April 1929, 1267 lots (cf. Taf. 43, a binding with the same insignia appearing on our binding); and in two sales conducted jointly by Ulrico Hoepli and Braus-Riggenbach, 'Bibliothèque Eugène de Beauharnais (Vice-Roi d'Italie et Duc de Leuchtenberg) et des Ducs de Leuchtenberg provenant du Château de Seon en Bavière', Zurich, 23–24 May 1935, 301 lots; and 'La Biblioteca di Eugenio de Beauharnais, Vicerè d'Italia', Milan, 20–22 November 1935, 226 lots (Tavole XI, XVI, XXV, XIX reproduce bindings with the insignia appearing on our binding).

Cremona,¹² and Biblioteca Civica Queriniana in Brescia,¹³ but also in the Musée Condé in Chantilly, Universitätsbibliothek Graz,¹⁴ and Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin. A preliminary organisation of these bindings according to type is well-underway.¹⁵

Lodigiani worked in Paris in 1807–1808 and adopted the conventions of the Bozerian style. A roll used on this binding resembles one associated with Jean-Claude Bozerian (1762–1840),¹⁶ another roll is a copy of one associated with the Duplanil bindery.¹⁷

The Discorsi of the Milan academy was published annually from 1806. Another volume in the series (commemorating the competition held in 1810), bound by Lodigiani using the same armorial block, was in the Mortimer L. Schiff collection.¹⁸ Neither it nor the present volume can be traced in the 1928–1935 Leuchtenberg sale catalogues.¹⁹

A copy of the 1813 volume using the same armorial block, but without Lodigiani's ticket, was offered by Librairie Laurent Coulet, 'Catalogue 39', Paris 2008, item 57 (€9500). It is reproduced by Macchi, op. cit. (2010), p.167 fig. 2 ('mercato antiquario').

¹⁹ A copy of the 1809 volume was in the Leuchtenberg sale of 1928 (see note 4 above), lot 81: 'prachtvoller roter langentarber Maroquinbd. d.Z. Deckel, Steh- u. Innenkantenbordüre, überaus reiche ornamentale Rückenvergoldung' (i.e., without arms?).

A fine set of the Discorsi – though not containing the present volume – is in the Getty Research Institute²⁰ and another is in the Biblioteca Nazionale Braidense;²¹ most libraries, however, hold individual volumes (the National Gallery of Art, Washington, DC, possess 1810 only). No copy of this 1812 edition is located in the United Kingdom (according to COPAC); five copies are cited in the Italian census (ICCU):

- Crescentino, Biblioteca civica De Gregoriana
- Milan, Biblioteca comunale – Palazzo Sormani (mistakenly as 46pp.)
- Milan, Biblioteca delle Civiche raccolte storiche, Inv. 10047, shelfmark MPP.3443²²
- Parma, Biblioteca Palatina

and these are recorded elsewhere
