A FINELY-BOUND COPY of a descriptive catalogue of a new collection of ancient Greek and Roman sculptures (including inscribed altars), hurriedly assembled to offset the loss of Vatican antiquities taken by France in 1797.¹ The author, Filippo Visconti, was the son of Giovanni Battista (1722–1784), and younger brother of Ennio Quirino Visconti (1751–1818), successive curators of the Museo Pio-Clementina.² He modelled this work

² Although Giuseppe Antonio Guattani (1748–1830) is listed on the title-page as co-author, his contributions were incorporated only in the later volumes of the catalogue; this first volume was compiled by Visconti alone. See Orietta Rossi Pinelli, ‘Les orientations de l’historiographie artistique, la primauté de la sculpture et l’aménagement du Musée Chiaramonti au Vatican (1802–1808)’ in Jean-Baptiste Wicar et son temps, 1762–1834, edited by Maria Teresa Caracciolo and Gennaro Toscano (Villeneuve d’Ascq 2007) p.77 note 16 (citing F.A. after their magnificent catalogue of the Museo Pio-Clementina (in six folio volumes, 1782–1796; supplement 1807).³ Forty-four objects are described, each depicted in a full-page engraving, with the iconographies and descriptions of each work usually accompanied by details of excavation provenance, identity of the vendor, condition and restorations.

The loss of masterpieces confiscated by the French had stimulated widespread excavations, in order to make up the deficiency. New legislation, promulgated in 1802, restricted the export of antiquities from the Papal States, and set aside a sum of 10,000 scudi per annum for reconstitution of the museums. Many of the objects featured in this catalogue are the result of this enormous new energy and control: some were recently excavated (or handled) by the British digger and dealer, Robert Fagan (pls. XI, XV, XVI, XVIII, XXIV);⁴ others were obtained from the Italian restorer-dealers Carlo Albacini (pls. III, XIII, XXVI, XXVIII, XLI), Antonio d'Este (pls. XL, XLII), Francesco Antonio Franzoni, (pls. XI, XVI, XXIII, XXXII), Antonio Gastaldi (pl. XLIV), the brothers Vincenzo and Camillo Pacetti (pls. XII, XXV, XXIX, XXXIII, XXXVI, XLIII), and Giovanni Pierantoni (pls. XXXIV, XXXV). Several marbles had been excavated by the previous generation of diggers: Piranesi (pl. IX), Thomas Jenkins (pl. XIII), and Gavin Hamilton (pls. XXVI–XXXIX), or recovered from the Mattei collection (dispersed from 1770), or from the papal gardens on the Quirinale:

A large team of artists collaborated on the plates, including the draughtsmen Luigi Agricola, Francesco Giangiacomo, Arcangiolo Michele Migliarini, Ferdinando Mori, Filippo Pistrucci, L. Pontani, Andrea Pozzi; and the printmakers Niccolò Aureli, G.B. Balestra, Antonio Banzo, Girolamo Carattoni, Bernardino Consorti, Luigi Cunego, Giuseppe D'Este, Luigi Fabbri, Giovanni Folo, Pietro Fontana, Pietro Ghigi, G.B. Leonetti, Domenico Marchetti, Alessandro Mochetti, Giovanni Petrini, Andrea Ricciani, P. Savorelli, and Angelo Testa. In this copy, the engraved dedication plate depicts Canova's sculpted bust of Pope Pius VII on a pedestal in the long gallery.¹⁰ The plate is lacking in the British Antonio Canova was given responsibility for the installation of the new collection, in the galleries designed by Bramante to join the Belvedere to the Papal palace, adjacent to the Museo Pio-Clementino; they were opened to the public in 1810. By then activity on the catalogue had ceased, following the French annexation of the Papal States, and the removal of the Pope in 1809. It was resumed after the Restoration, but in other hands – owing to the pro-French views of his brother, Ennio Quirino, who had stayed in Paris to become Keeper in the Louvre, Filippo Visconti was not reappointed by Pius VII. A second volume, compiled by Antonio Nibby, was published in 1837; a concluding third volume (in combination with Luigi Biondi's Monumenti amaranziani) appeared in 1843.
